About the Ministry...

Hope Partnership

Nearly 2.5 million people live in poverty in the slums and urban areas of Nairobi, Kenya. They lack the basic necessities of life, including adequate housing, clean water, and sanitation services. Rivers of sewage and garbage run through the slums, and communities are plagued with diseases. Educational opportunities are negligible, and a lack of jobs complicates every problem.

There are nine distinct slums in Nairobi. Kibera, the largest, covers a square mile with a population of about one million people. The Kangemi slum has a population of about 650,000 poor people. Nearly a million more people live in the Mathare slum, an area of less than one square mile. Most families crowd as many as 10 people into one-room huts made of scrap wood, corrugated tin, or mud. Most have no electricity, running water, or toilets.

Thousands of children live on the streets, and turn to begging, stealing, prostitution, and drug-dealing to survive. This problem can be traced to urbanization, the breakdown of the extended family support system, ethnic tension between tribes, lack of social services and affordable education, skyrocketing unemployment, and droughts.

In this dark wilderness, Hope Partnership works to bring physical, emotional, and spiritual light through education and training to break the cycle of poverty and hopelessness.
